Author bio (extended version)

Eddy Manfred Inserra III is an author, entrepreneur, and technologist dedicated to uncovering the intersection of history and integrity. Born and raised in Woburn, Massachusetts, Eddy's career has spanned from pioneering the "link in bio" social media space to leading global product lines in X-ray detection technology.

His latest project, Confidence of The Mob, was born from a startling discovery: a box of government memos, surveillance photos, and handwritten notes belonging to his late grandfather, Fred G. Pastore. Pastore, a legendary 6'4" Chief of the IRS Intelligence Unit in Boston, was a man who lived in the "grey area"—navigating the world of high-stakes federal investigations before eventually becoming a trusted advisor to the very underworld figures he once pursued.

For over a decade, Eddy has meticulously reconstructed this history, bridging the gap between family legend and classified federal reality. This journey led to the creation of both the book and a 12-episode companion podcast, which features rare historical insights and firsthand interviews with the agents and targets who lived through the era.

A self-taught entrepreneur and product manager by trade, Eddy applies a rigorous, investigative lens to storytelling, ensuring that Fred's legacy—and the broader history of the New England Mob—is preserved with accuracy and depth. Today, he lives in Massachusetts with his wife, Eileen, and their two boys Eddy and Andrew, where he continues to build new platforms and tell stories that challenge our understanding of law and loyalty.
